FORT ANN HISTORY

FROM THE FORT ANN HISTORICAL SOCIETY

4 CHARLES ST:

Federal-style building of fieldstone and brick, built in 1840. Rebuilt from the original fort house, which stood within the walls of Fort Anne during the Revolution. Facing the front of the building, you can see the marker for the 'Old Well - used in fort site. Built before Revolutionary War by Queen Anne of England.' On the corner of Charles and George streets, the marker reads 'Fort Anne - Gateway to North - Here stood five forts, 1690 - 1777.'

VILLAGE HISTORY:

The Village of Fort Ann, incorporated in 1820, is located fifteen miles from the Vermont border, at the foot of the Adirondack Mountains. It lies along an Indian path between the Hudson River and Lake Champlain, on what was known as the "Warpath of the Nation" and was the scene of many war parties, from early Indian raids to Burgoyne's expeditions during the Revolution. In 1777, Fort Ann was also the site of a very important Revolutionary War battle, the Battle of Fort Anne, that saw the nation's new "Stars and Stripes" flown for the first time in battle. American rebels fought in the Battle of Fort Anne and then retreated ahead of Burgoyne's invading army, felling trees to block the road to the south. Their sabotage delayed the British advance long enough for Colonial Forces to mount a successful defense at Saratoga and turn the tide of war in America's favor.

The Battle of Fort Anne was the most important battle that ever took place in Washington County, and it was also, as attested to by officers on both sides, considering the number of men engaged, one of the most hotly contested conflicts of the Revolution.

The Battle Hill monument is located 0.8 miles north of the traffic light on Route 4, on the left, set in a stone cliff face. The marker reads: "Battle Hill, at this pass was fought the battle of Fort Anne, July 8, 1777. Here Burgoyne was first checked in his victorious march by a fierce all day battle with the Americans which delayed the British and made possible their defeat at Saratoga.

When the wars gave way to settlement, the nearly level terrain presented the most promising route for a canal connecting Lake Champlain to the Hudson River. The Champlain Canal opened in 1823, making Fort Ann an inland port. The canal also served as a route for fugitive slaves in the decades before the civil war.
